(TL:RSP-01; 11-01-2001)

12 FAH-8 H-831 GENERAL

(TL:RSP-01; 11-01-2001)

The primary goal of the Residential Security Program (RSP) is the fair and equitable protection of all employees and eligible family members under the authority of a COM. An individual employee for his or her own personal reasons might wish to purchase and/or install residential security equipment above that which is provided by the U.S. Government. For example, an employee with a valuable art collection might wish to have an alarm system at a post where the security environment threat list (SETL) rating does not mandate alarm systems. Employees from any U.S. Government agency seeking to increase the security of his or her residence may only do so as long as the following conditions are met:

(1) All additional security equipment must be purchased, installed, operated and removed at the employee's expense;

(2) When the U.S. Government does not own the residence, the occupant must provide written approval from the landlord or owner to the RSO and General Services Officer (GSO) prior to any alterations to the property. The owner's approval request when submitted to the RSO and GSO must include a full description of the proposed alterations and enhancements;

(3) When the U.S. Government owns the residence, any alterations to the property must have approval from the RSO and GSO. The request for approval submitted to the RSO and GSO must include a full description of the proposed alterations and enhancements; and

(4) Should an employee fail to remove any personal security enhancement or restore any alteration, whether approved or unapproved, the employee will be personally liable for any costs associated with restoration of the property. For further information see 6 FAM 713.3-2, Responsibilities of the SRPM.
